Atlanta, GA — Oct. 2, 2024 — The two organizations, the Boys & Girls Clubs of America and Guitar Center, have partnered to foster youth creativity through the creation of a new event called “Music of Tomorrow.” This event is designed to inspire youth to explore musical composition and creation by hosting various workshops. These workshops will take place at the Ford Amphitheater in Colorado Springs, Colorado, beginning at noon on June 21, 2025.

Gabe Dalporto, CEO of Guitar Center, said the company will provide music instructors, instruments and recording equipment for the workshops held throughout the event. Doing this, Dalporto hopes to impart a passion for music to the next generation of musicians.

“Coming from a family of musicians, some of my fondest memories growing up were of visiting Guitar Center stores with my father where we obsessed over the incredible guitars,” Dalporto said.

To conclude the “Music of Tomorrow” event, the BGCA and Guitar Center will host giveaways, and offer attendees prizes and employment opportunities. These include:

- Giveaway
  - The “Music of Tomorrow” contest winner will be gifted an instrument of choice from the Guitar Center.
  - One year of free music lessons

“After all, providing great futures for kids and teens depends on all of us, and the time to take responsibility and act is now,” said Jim Clark, CEO of the Boys & Girls Clubs of America.

For parents: How the Boys & Girls Clubs of America support youth development through music

Choreographed dancing and harmonized singing. Music blaring out to a crowd of proud parents and community members. This summarizes the brilliant performance of the Fashion Queens, a youth group from the Boys & Girls Clubs of America, during the Youth of the Year event.

Youth of the Year, held annually, aims to showcase the importance of leadership, among other traits and skills. However, music-based performances, like that of the Fashion Queens, highlight the importance of music as a developmental tool for youth.

According to one article from the National Library of Medicine, “Music may expose the child to challenges and multi-sensory experiences which enhance learning abilities and encourage cognitive development. In particular, music can also engage cognitive functions, such as planning, working memory, inhibition, and flexibility.

Furthermore, a survey from Guitar Center states that 82% of parents want their children to learn an instrument. Moreover, 55% of these respondents also support increasing musical education in school curriculum.

Interestingly, another study from the American Psychological Association states that youth who play an instrument and participate in music programs (like band and orchestra) have better academic performance.

The Fashion Queen’s performance during Youth of the Year is just one example of how music empowers young people at the Boys & Girls Clubs of America. Through programs like MusicMakers and Lyricism 101, the BGCA equips youth with skills that benefit them in the short and long term.

These programs serve as a potent reminder to parents that supporting youth in musical endeavors is not just about providing fun and entertainment — it’s an investment in their future. By making these opportunities accessible, the BGCA is helping to shape a generation equipped with resilience, creativity and the skills to succeed.

Jim Clark: "Music of Tomorrow" as an event for the local Colorado Springs, Colorado, community

Wrapping up Youth of the Year, we're thrilled to introduce our next major event: "Music of Tomorrow"! In partnership with Guitar Center, this one-day experience on June 21, 2025 — World Music Day — will offer young people in Colorado Springs a chance to explore instruments and participate in engaging music workshops.

We chose Colorado Springs as our host city to honor a community deeply connected to the Boys & Girls Clubs of America: the United States military. With five nearby installations, including Fort Carson and the U.S. Air Force Academy, this region is home to many military families. "Music of Tomorrow" celebrates these youth, creating a space for kids of all backgrounds to connect and explore music together.

Parents, this event is unique, blending music, community, and celebration. Scholarships will be awarded to high school students aiming to study music in college, and the Guitar Center will give the winner of our music competition an instrument of their choice. Join us from noon to 6:00 p.m. at Ford Amphitheater — it is accessible and open to all. For more information, reach out at 404-487-5700 or visit our website to learn more about our programs for youth of all ages.

Letter: Dual-enlisted military families and the struggle for childcare

The Problem

As part of a dual-enlisted military family, I often juggle many responsibilities. Let's face it; while the military offers some security, it can make other aspects of life difficult — especially if your spouse is also enlisted.

My husband and I tried to manage these duties together, but our conflicting schedules resulted in a balance of carefully constructed chaos. We had to start looking for an after-school program after our schedules changed because we would both get home two hours after my 9-year-old daughter would arrive home from school.

The Ft. Carson Army Base's Child Development Center (CDC) only accepts children up to 5 years old, and babysitters are costly. Neither my husband nor I have family in the state that could help us with this situation, and I was beginning to run out of sustainable options.

Conveniently, Colorado Springs, Colorado, is home to multiple Boys & Girls Clubs of America locations, two of which are near Ft. Carson Army Base. The BGCA is a nonprofit organization that offers after-school and summer programs for youth of all ages.

However, my foremost priority as a parent is my child's safety and security.

The BGCA's safety policies and practices echoed my resounding need for security. They've implemented several protocols to protect children, such as mandatory annual background checks, mandatory reporting and safety assessments.

The Outcome

It's been four months since my daughter started attending the Boys & Girls Club of the Pikes Peak Region, and I couldn't be happier with my decision. She has started participating in various new clubs, her grades have risen, and she is making friends.

I'm grateful to the staff for being accommodating and communicative. They are helping to give my daughter the community she needs to thrive as a military brat.

Letter to editor: <https://gazette.com/editor/>

I chose The Gazette in Colorado Springs, Colorado, as my outlet. They have an Op-Ed section and give clear instructions on how to submit a letter to an editor. Moreover, they distribute in Colorado Springs, Colorado, where my campaign will take place. If The Gazette's editor chose to accept my Op-Ed, I would reach my primary audience and increase my event's newsworthiness (but not in an obvious manner).

For The Gazette, an Op-Ed can be an opinion, editorial or letter column (many outlets with an Op/Ed section are newspapers). I believe that this Op-Ed (written by a fictional character inspired by my experience as a military wife and brat) would fall under the "letter" category of The Gazette's Op-Ed column.

This character isn't arguing or attempting to blatantly persuade the reader to believe or act on anything. She is merely a military parent sharing her story. Other letters on The Gazette's website are similar in that their goal is to inform the audience based on the writer's personal experience.

Additionally, the Op-Ed section of The Gazette is very alive. They publish content frequently (multiple times a week), and the newspaper's daily readership is 122,200 people on average. Only one editor is listed for the Op-Ed section, and I made the letter 300 words or under to get priority.
